11. Summary: Embassy Freetown's outreach in Freetown included articles surrounding the commemoration of Black History Month, including a discussion hosted by Ambassador Perry and film showings at the Kissy and Fourah Bay College Libraries. Ambassador Perry also opened a seminar on resources management for Sierra Leone government officials. Special Projects Coordinator Joachim Van Brandt participated in launching events organized by 2007 DHRF grantees Prison Watch - Sierra Leone and the Community Action for Development Programmes and Services of a women's advocacy project (CADEPS). The events were covered well and accurately.

12. Post and Mission Activities/Press Releases:

1A. In honor of Black History Month, Ambassador Perry hosted a film showing and discussion at the Kissy library on Monday, February 4, a US Embassy press release said. In her remarks, Ambassador Perry recalled her own involvement in the civil rights movement, including her work with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Ambassador Perry stressed the importance of respect for human rights, adding that the principles of nonviolence were central to the success of the civil rights movement in the US. "The way to see real change in a society is through nonviolent, rational resistance against unjust laws and unjust leaders through an on-going dialogue between all parties..." The film, "African American Lives," was written by Dr. Henry Louis Gates, and the showing was open to the public. The film was also screened at the Embassy for invited students and for students at Fourah Bay College.

1B. On Monday, February 4, Ambassador Perry opened a Seminar on Defense Resource Management in Freetown, said a U.S. Embassy press release. The two-week-long seminar emphasized the need for effective and responsible resource management in the Republic of Sierra Leone Armed Forces. At the opening ceremony, Ambassador Perry told the forty participants they were entrusted with the nation's most valuable resources -- people, land, and money -- and should do everything in their power to care for those resources. She stressed that all nations must work to maximize the effectiveness of finite resources. The Defense Resource Management Institute, in Monterrey, California, was responsible for running the seminar.

1C. On Friday, February 8, Special Projects Coordinator Joachim Van Brandt launched a DHRF project for Community Action for Development Programmes and Services of a women's advocacy project (CADEPS), a local organization working towards women's political participation at all levels.

While giving his keynote address, SPC Van Brandt urged Sierra Leonean women, particularly those from Koinadugu District - the only district without a female councilor - to actively participate in the various arenas of public life, including politics. He said women have a responsibility to positively contribute to the development of their societies, adding that they should learn from the U.S. where a female candidate is vying for the White House.

The local press reported as follows:

1D. On Wednesday, February 20, Special Projects Coordinator Joachim Van Brandt launched the Prisons Watch Sierra Leone 2006-2007 report on prison conditions across the country. Prison Watch Sierra Leone Coordinator, Mambu Feika, said his organization seeks to ensure that the rights of prisoners and detainees are respected and that prison conditions meet the minimum international standards. With funding from the Embassy's Democracy and Human Rights Fund (DHRF), Mr. Mambu said his organization held sensitization programs on human rights and related issues around the country.

1A. On Thursday, January 31, the chairperson of National Electoral Commission (NEC), Dr. Christiana Thorpe, announced that parliamentary bye-elections will be held on March 29. Dr. Thorpe said bye-elections will be held for four constituencies only, adding that the commission had completed boundary delimitations for the local government elections. Dr. Thorpe said the delimitation exercise was based primarily on population size, adding that the commission ensured that the wholeness of chiefdoms and sections were not affected by the exercise. Dr. Thorpe said the commission would start a revision of the electoral register as soon as the new ward boundaries were approved by parliament. The local council election will be held on July 5. There are 394 wards and 475 prospective councilors.

¶B. The Jenkins Johnston Commission of enquiry into the violent clashes between protesters and the police in Koidu - which resulted in the death of two people - concluded its hearings on Monday, February 4. The commission first started hearing witness testimony in Koidu before it moved to Freetown. On the last day of the proceeding, Police Superintendent of Tankoro Chiefdom, who was alleged to have ordered police officers to shoot protesters in Kono, told the Commission that he neither gave weapons to police officers nor did he order police to fire at protesters. Chief Superintendent Joseph B. Kabia said he later learnt that the order to shoot the protesters came directly from Freetown. In his closing remarks, the chairman of the commission, Mr. Jenkins Johnston said they will write a report and make recommendations to the government.

¶C. The American billionaire and philanthropist, George Soros, visited Sierra Leone on the weekend of February 8. At a meeting with senior government officials, including President Koroma, Mr. Soros said he was interested in investing and assisting Sierra Leone, adding, "the country is in dire need of such assistance and it is in a better position for development than other African countries emerging from war." He said "it is time to combat those distractions and translate them into practical achievements with considerable success." Mr. Soros, founder and chairman of a network of foundations, said he would help the government of Sierra Leone to combat environmental problems like deforestation. At a press conference in Freetown, Mr. Soros also pledged to assist the government in the extractive industry to ensure that the natural resources benefit the people, and not the rulers. President Koroma said he was grateful for Mr. Soros's visit and called on him to support his government in key areas.

¶D. Members of the Political Parties Registration Commission (PPRC) completed an inspection and verification exercise on the Western Area offices of all registered political parties on January 31. Section 22 of the Political Parties' Act 2002 requires all political parties to periodically furnish the commission with particulars of their National and Regional offices. Chairman of the PPRC, Mr. Roland Caesar, said out of the seven political parties that contested the 2007 elections, only the APC, SLPP, PMDC, and NDA had functioning offices. He said the team also verified the validity of the tenancy agreements of the four functioning political parties. Mr. Caesar said the commission was contemplating taking legal action against the three political parties that closed down their offices without notifying them.

1E. On Monday, February 4, the World Bank representative wrote a letter to the Ministry of Energy and Power noting that while the institution was committed to temporary 'bridging' arrangements until Bumbuna comes on line, he felt the agreements with the Independent Power Producers (IPP) were unnecessarily expensive. Mr. Ishac Diwan warned that the agreement with the IPP to provide 25 megawatts electricity for Freetown will cost Sierra Leone over $5 million a month, saying he was not sure about the sustainability of the agreement. He said the two IPP agreements with Income Electrix Ltd and Delamore Owl/Emeiola Group were signed without 'prior consultation' with the World Bank. Mr. Diwan said the idea of National Power Authority (NPA) buying all the IPP's power capacity would create extra costs, adding that an earlier agreement with the Global Trading Group, which the World Bank supervised, had no such contractual clause. The World Bank said the costs to NPA were unsustainable - unless tariffs for NPA power were immediately doubled and up to 250 NPA workers laid off.

1F. On Tuesday, February 12, National Electoral Commissioner, Dr. Christiana Thorpe, announced that 477 Presiding Officers were blacklisted for electoral malpractice during the 2007 Presidential run-off elections. Dr. Thorpe said all elections staff who worked at polling stations that recorded over 100% voter turnout were blacklisted, adding that the commission had started the recruitment of temporary staff for the parliamentary bye-elections. This brings the total number blacklisted by the commission to 1,575.

1G. On Wednesday, February 13, vehicles queued for fuel at filling stations in Freetown, raising fears that a fuel shortage was looming. The pump price of fuel was increased three months ago (in November 2007), causing an increase in price for essential commodities. Minister of Information and Communication, Ibrahim Ben Kargbo, said the reason for the inadequate supply of fuel was because Sierra Leone's oil refinery was not functioning, saying the government relied on the Ivory Coast refinery to supply fuel to the country.

Deputy Director of Petroleum Unit, Sabieu Conteh, insisted that there was enough fuel in the country and was surprised about rumors of a shortage.

H. Fullah businessman Alhaji Lamrana Bah was brutally murdered on February 15, causing panic among Fullahs in Freetown. Mr. Bah was shot and killed at Calaba Town, east of Freetown, by unidentified gunmen at 7 PM local time as he was driving home. Fullahs perceived the killing of Mr. Bah as a threat to their safety, especially since no suspects have been arrested in the separate murders of eight fullahs over the years. After the death of Mr. Bah, the Fullah chief and Minister of Mineral Resources, Mr. Jalloh, urged his tribesmen to remain calm. The Fullahs subsequently resolved to close down their shops. The strike action affected consumers as Fullahs are some of the main dealers of essential commodities and wholesalers through whom middlemen and retailers survive. Meanwhile, the Sierra Leone Police have offered a Le. two million (approx. USD 670) reward for information that will lead to the arrest and prosecution of those responsible for the murder. The Fullah community has upped the reward by Le. 48 million (approx. USD 16,080). Three people have been arrested and are helping the police in their investigations.

I. On Wednesday, February 16, President Koroma started a two-day official visit to Libya to hold discussions with President Ghaddafi concerning how the bilateral relation between the two countries can be strengthened. Following several consultative meetings, the Libyan government promised to give more support to Sierra Leone in the agriculture, health, education, energy, and tourism sectors. In the area of agriculture, President Ghaddafi pledged to provide some agricultural equipment, including 30 tractors. President Ghaddafi also pledged to build schools, build a prosthetic factory for the production of artificial limbs for amputees, and refurbish, repair, and equip a referral hospital. President Ghadaffi also pledged his assistance in rural water-supply and tourism. He promised to send Swiss engineers to carry out feasibility studies on the second phase of the Bumbuna Hydro Project with a view to determining Libya's intervention. The Libyan government also promised to send a technical expert delegation to Freetown to carry out feasibility studies in the investment potential of Sierra Leone especially in the areas of tourism and energy provision. This will be followed by a joint commission meeting.

J. On Friday, February 22, the Special Court's Appeals Chamber upheld long sentences for three former leaders of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC). Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara, and Santigie Borbor Kanu were each convicted last June on 11 of 14 counts for war crimes, crimes against humanity, and other serious violations of international humanitarian law. Brima and Kanu each received sentences of 50 years, while Kamara received a 45 year sentence. All three defendants appealed their convictions, with Brima appealing on 12 grounds, Kamara on 13, and Kanu on 19. In an Appeal Judgment summary read out in Court by Presiding Judge Justice George Gelaga King, the Court dismissed all of the Defendants' appeals. The Prosecution also entered nine grounds of appeal against the Trial Court judgment, including appeals against the Trial Chamber's dismissal of the count of forced marriage and the Prosecution's pleading of Joint Criminal Enterprise in the indictment. In its judgment, the Trial Chamber dismissed the count of forced marriage as an "other inhumane act," ruling by a majority that it was not significantly different from other counts of rape and sexual slavery. The Appeals Chamber upheld the Prosecution's appeal in part. The Appeals Chamber found that acts of forced marriage amount to a separate crime under international law. This is the first such finding by any international court. The Appeals Chamber also reversed a Trial Chamber decision that the Prosecution had not properly pleaded the issue of Joint Criminal Enterprise. The Chief Prosecutor said he welcomed the Appeals Chamber's verdict, saying it was a victory for the people of Sierra Leone.

1K. On Friday, February 22, the Political Parties Registration Commission (PPRC) released the a report on the expenditures incurred by the seven political parties that contested the 2007 elections. The All Peoples Congress (APC) was the highest spender. The party's presidential candidate, Ernest Bai Koroma, spent Le. 850,000,000 (approx. USD 285,000), while his running mate, Samuel Sam-Sumana, spent Le. 415,720,000 (approx. USD 139,000). The APC spent a total of Le. 2,297,574,000 (approx. USD 770,000). The party did not submit a financial report for the 102 parliamentary candidates it fielded. The Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP) did not submit a comprehensive financial statement for its presidential and vice presidential candidates. The party's financial statement only covered its operating costs and the expenditures of 30 parliamentary candidates, which amounted to Le. 1,802,081,400 (approx. USD 604,000). The presidential candidate for the Peoples Movement for Democratic Change (PMDC), Charles Margai, Le. 215,000,450 (approx. USD 72,000). His running mate, Dr. I.I. Tejan-Jalloh, Le. 3,368,500 (approx. USD 1,100). The PMDC spent a total of Le. 2,114,023,055 (approx. USD 708,000). The PPRC commended the PMDC as the only party that complied with the constitutional provisions regarding disclosure of elections expenditure. The Convention People's Party (CPP) spent a total of Le. 605,182,000 (approx. USD 203,000). The National Democratic Alliance (NDA) spent a total of Le. 1,735,000,419 (approx. USD 581,000). The United National Peoples Party (UNPP) and the Peace Liberation Party (PLP) spent Le. 756,532,700 (approx. USD 253,000), and Le. 32,091,000 (approx. USD 11,000)), respectively.

1L. On Friday, February 22, the UK Secretary of State for International Development (DFID), Douglas Alexander, arrived in Sierra Leone to meet with President Koroma and senior government officials, and visit projects that are funded by the Department for International Development (DFID). During his visit, Mr. Alexander donated the sum of 32 million pounds (approx. USD 65.2 million) to the government of Sierra Leone for a five-year water and sanitation programme countrywide. Mr. Alexander commended Sierra Leoneans for conducting free and fair elections, saying the country is "a model for the rest of Africa." He also commended the people of Sierra Leone for their sense of resilience after decade-long violence that crippled almost every facet of society. President Koroma told Mr. Alexander that the expectations of the people of Sierra Leone are high, saying he counted on the UK government to continue its assistance to the country. He promised to use foreign aid in the best interest of the country.

13. On Wednesday, February 27, normal life in the southern provincial headquarter town of Bo was disrupted by angry youths of the ruling All Peoples Congress (APC) who allegedly attacked, vandalized and looted the headquarters of the opposition Sierra Leone Peoples Party (SLPP). The confusion started when SLPP supporters allegedly defaced the statue of President Ernest Koroma, an act which was considered insulting by supporters of the APC. Some senior SLPP officials were briefly taken into police custody for "protective reasons." On the same day, the SLPP issued a press release condemning the "acts of intimidation supported by the APC hierarchy and an attempt to suppress the opposition activities in the country." The release also accused Resident Minister of Southern Province, Musa Tarawally, of masterminding the violence, adding, "he is supported by the President, Ernest Bai Koroma." The party issued another press release condemning the act of defacing the president's portrait, but criticized the police for failing to protect their Southern region office. The APC Secretary General, Victor Foh, also condemned the acts of violence and called on the police to investigate and prosecute the culprits.
